CLASS 1332  Elementary Sanskrit II  X-List:  LING 1132, SANSK 1132
351-267  Class #: 2654  4 credits.  MTRF 10:10-11:00  Ruppel, A.  Room GSH 122
Prerequisite: CLASS 1331. Sanskrit /Linguistics 1131 or equivalent.
An introduction to the essentials of Sanskrit grammar. Designed to enable the student to read as quickly as possible.

CLASS 1531  FWS: Greek Myth  X-List:  LING 1132, SANSK 1132
361-732  Class #: Below  credits.  Room LNC 117
The course will focus on the stories about the gods and heroes of the Greeks as they appear in the works of ancient Greek literature. We will read a selection from Greek authors, inquiring into the relationship between myths and cultural, religious, and political realia of the society in which they were shaped and perpetuated. Alongside the primary texts, we will read a number of recent scholarly works on the subject. We will start by discussing myths in general terms (theories, basic concepts) and will proceed toward the analysis of individual stories and cycles. This fascinating material will serve as a vehicle for improving your written communication skills. Assignments will include preparatory writing and six essays focusing on our readings and discussions in class.
Classes:
SEM 101 (Class #15082) - D. Mankin - TR 11:40-12:55, LNC 117
SEM 102 (Class #15083) - J. Leon - MWF 10:10-11:00, LNC 117

<td>As a theme, the Odyssey dominates modern Greek poetry like no other. It was also an inspiration for Arabic and Persian literature, notably the tales of Sinbad’s adventures. Few poets have avoided the subject and some, like Nikos Kazantzakis and George Seferis, spent much of their creative life writing their own modern versions of Homer’s original. In 20th century Greek literature, as in modern Hebrew, the dominance of a classical text is one that poets faced in creative ways, paying homage on the one hand, but often ironically undermining and reworking the original to suit a very different context. The poets we will read, including some lesser-known women writers, have all taken Homer as their starting point, but they have produced a rich variety of responses to his text, including some untraditional readings of Penelope. We will compare the way modern Hebrew poets like Amichai and Ravikovich re-tell biblical tales to the modern Greeks.</td>

CLASS 3724  Death in the Roman Empire  X-List:  ARTH 3724
364-137   Class #: 14886   4 credits.  TR  2:55-4:10  Platt/Alexandridis  Room  GSH 124
This co-taught class will explore Roman culture from the late Republic to Late Antiquity through the lens of death and remembrance. We will focus on visual, epigraphic and literary evidence for the ways in which different social groups dealt with loss and mortality and used the context of the tomb to express their social, ethnic, religious and familial identities, both for themselves and to society at large. As well as focusing on Roman Italy, we will explore the blending of Roman and local funerary traditions in diverse contexts within the empire, from the province of Britannia to the Egyptian Fayum and Syrian Palmyra. In addition to the themes of burial ritual, funerary portraiture, the use of mythological and religious iconography, and the influence of Roman traditions upon early Christian burial practices, we will explore the wider significance of death in Roman culture, including the display of death as spectacle in the arena, the impact of imperial funerary monuments upon the urban landscape, and the notion of the "good death" in the Roman moral tradition. The class will be a mixture of lecture and seminar, i.e. students are required to present short papers.

CLASS 3727  Iconography of Greek Myth  X-List:  ARTH 3230
359-326   Class #: 15439   4 credits.  TR  11:40-12:55  Alexandridis, A.  Room  GSH G22
Myths are traditional tales. Their authority becomes apparent in that they were constantly adapted to changing social, political, cultural etc. conditions. Although this seems to be a widely accepted definition so far, it is deeply influenced by Greek tradition. Not only is the term mythos (word, tale) Greek, but the ubiquity of Greek gods, heroes and their deeds in ancient literature and material culture has given myths an importance they might not have had in other cultures. This class will give an overview of the most important Greek myths and mythological figures as depicted in Greek and Roman times. The chronological frame will range from the 7th century BC to the 3rd century AD. We will discuss the iconography of the Olympian gods and their escorts; of myths such as the loves of the gods; the battles between the Olympian Gods and the Giants, between Greeks and Amazons as well as between Lapiths and Centaurs; the Trojan War; the adventures of Odysseus; the heroic deeds of Heracles, Theseus and Perseus among others. By analyzing where and when mythological images were on display it will become clear how myths were adapted to their specific context as well as why certain myths were more often depicted or more popular than others.
Limited to 15 students. Our political lives are rife with objects (red tape, rubber stamps, etc.). Yet we rarely inquire as to how these things have shaped our sense of authority and our attachment to the polity. This seminar explores the materiality of political life by drawing broadly on contemporary works in art history, social thought, media studies, archaeology, socio-cultural anthropology, and literary theory to piece together a sense of the political lives of things. The goal of the course is to juxtapose the sense, sensibility, and sentiments of objects with the production and reproduction of authority. In so doing, the course opens an interdisciplinary dialogue on both the nature of our relationship with things and our ties to our political communities.

Advanced discussion of some important figures and movements in Ancient Philosophy. Specific texts and topics vary from year to year.

The point of the seminar is to study several related questions: how deep was the Founders' knowledge of the Classics (i.e., did it go beyond Plutarch and Livy?) How well did they know Latin and Greek? To what extent did these men actually use Greek and Roman texts in developing their political theories and ultimately the U.S. Constitution? How conscious were they of classical influences upon their thought? To what extent did they model their political aspirations and behavior upon the lives of leading Greeks and Romans? How did their views of actual Athenian democracy and the Roman Republic influence their political thinking? The format will be seminar discussion of mostly primary reading. Students will write one shorter paper on the reading, and a longer research paper on a major topic such as religious freedom, the structure of government, democratic vs. republican ideals, or classical origins of federalism. Grades will be determined by class participation as well as by the two papers.

An advisor must be chosen by the end of the student's sixth semester. Topics must be approved by the Standing Committee on Honors by the beginning of the seventh semester. See "Honors," Classics front matter.

Limited to 10 students. This course will explore archaeological and literary evidence for the production, display, ritual treatment and cultural reception of sacred images in ancient Greece. We will focus on some of the most exciting and problematic themes relating to the representation of divine beings in material form, such as the potential and limitations of anthroporphism; the use of alternative modes of material manifestation such as aniconism, semi-iconic forms (such as herms) and theriomorphism (the representation of gods as animals); the relationship between "cult" and "votive" images; the replication and adaptation of cult statues to new contexts of display; and shifting attitudes to image-worship within polytheistic and monotheistic traditions. Students in Classics, Art History, Religious Studies and Anthropology should find this course of particular interest.

As the first project of the new Cornell-Yale Consortium for the Study of Ancient Art, this course will be taught in parallel with a similar course at Yale University led by Professor Milette Gaifman. On April 16th-17th, Cornell students will visit Yale for a joint workshop and object session in the university museum.

Limited to Classics graduate teaching assistants. Pedagogical instruction and course coordination. Required for all graduate student teachers of LATIN 1201-1202 and First-Year Writing Seminars.
This seminar course will critically review the research history of, research methods in, and current problems and issues in Archaeology (with some bias towards the Old World: Medieval through Classical to Prehistoric). It will focus on discussion of topic areas via weekly readings. Areas to be considered will include: history of archaeology, archaeological theory and interpreting the past, classical archaeology, excavation, survey, managing the past and issues of ethics and collecting and looting, dating, science v. humanities in archaeology, religion and ritual in archaeology, settlement archaeology, material culture and economic archaeology, social archaeology, gender, archaeology and texts.
